Companies agree to compensate damage

The Department of Energy and Geo Tech have agreed to pay a reasonable sum toward repairing the lower cemetery road in Monticello. The companies are using the road while doing stabilization work at the old uranium mill site.

Joe Slade, representing the Monticello City Council, met with county commissioners and county road department personnel to request that the county make a cost estimate of damage to the road. The county agreed. Commissioners asked Slade to see if the companies are willing to pay an annual maintenance fee for as long as they use the road.

Doug Pehrson, representing the county road department, said the county is already upgrading the road to more acceptable standards.
